

Toledo GROWs

*Gardens
Revitalize
Our World.*

Toledo GROWs, Gardens Revitalize Our World, educates our community about the value of local nutritious food. Our active urban farm and support for community gardens promote healthy eating and create a region alive with gardens.

Since its creation in 1995, the organization has grown to include 125 community gardens and an urban farm in downtown Toledo – the home of Toledo GROWs. The farm offers a variety of educational features, including the Robert J. Anderson Urban Agriculture Center, hoop houses, a greenhouse, chickens, bees, a teaching kitchen, and a variety of garden beds to demonstrate and teach sustainable practices in growing produce. It serves as home base for Toledo GROWs' work with community gardens, including technical assistance, free seeds and seedlings, education, loan of tools, and assistance with volunteers. People of all ages come to the farm to learn through educational programs and field trips, as well as through hands-on learning as they volunteer.

Visit Toledo GROWs to witness how an urban farm can transform a central city neighborhood.

Educating our community about the value of local nutritious food.

Why is this work important?

In Lucas County:

- 18% of residents live in poverty – 25.5% in Toledo
- 21 census tracts are food deserts - 18% of residents live in those areas
- 72% of adult residents are overweight or obese
- Only 20% of area adults eat five daily servings of fruits and vegetables – 4% eat none
- 22% of residents feel only slightly safe in their neighborhood – 4% feel not at all safe

We know:

- People who garden eat more fruits and vegetables
- Gardening motivates people to stay active longer than other activities
- Community gardeners save between $75 and $380 in food costs each season
- When neighbors know and interact with one another, they feel safer
- Crime decreases in neighborhoods as the amount of green space increases

How does Toledo GROWs assist people of all ages to learn to grow and eat healthy food?
